Share in the natural wonder of Wollert.

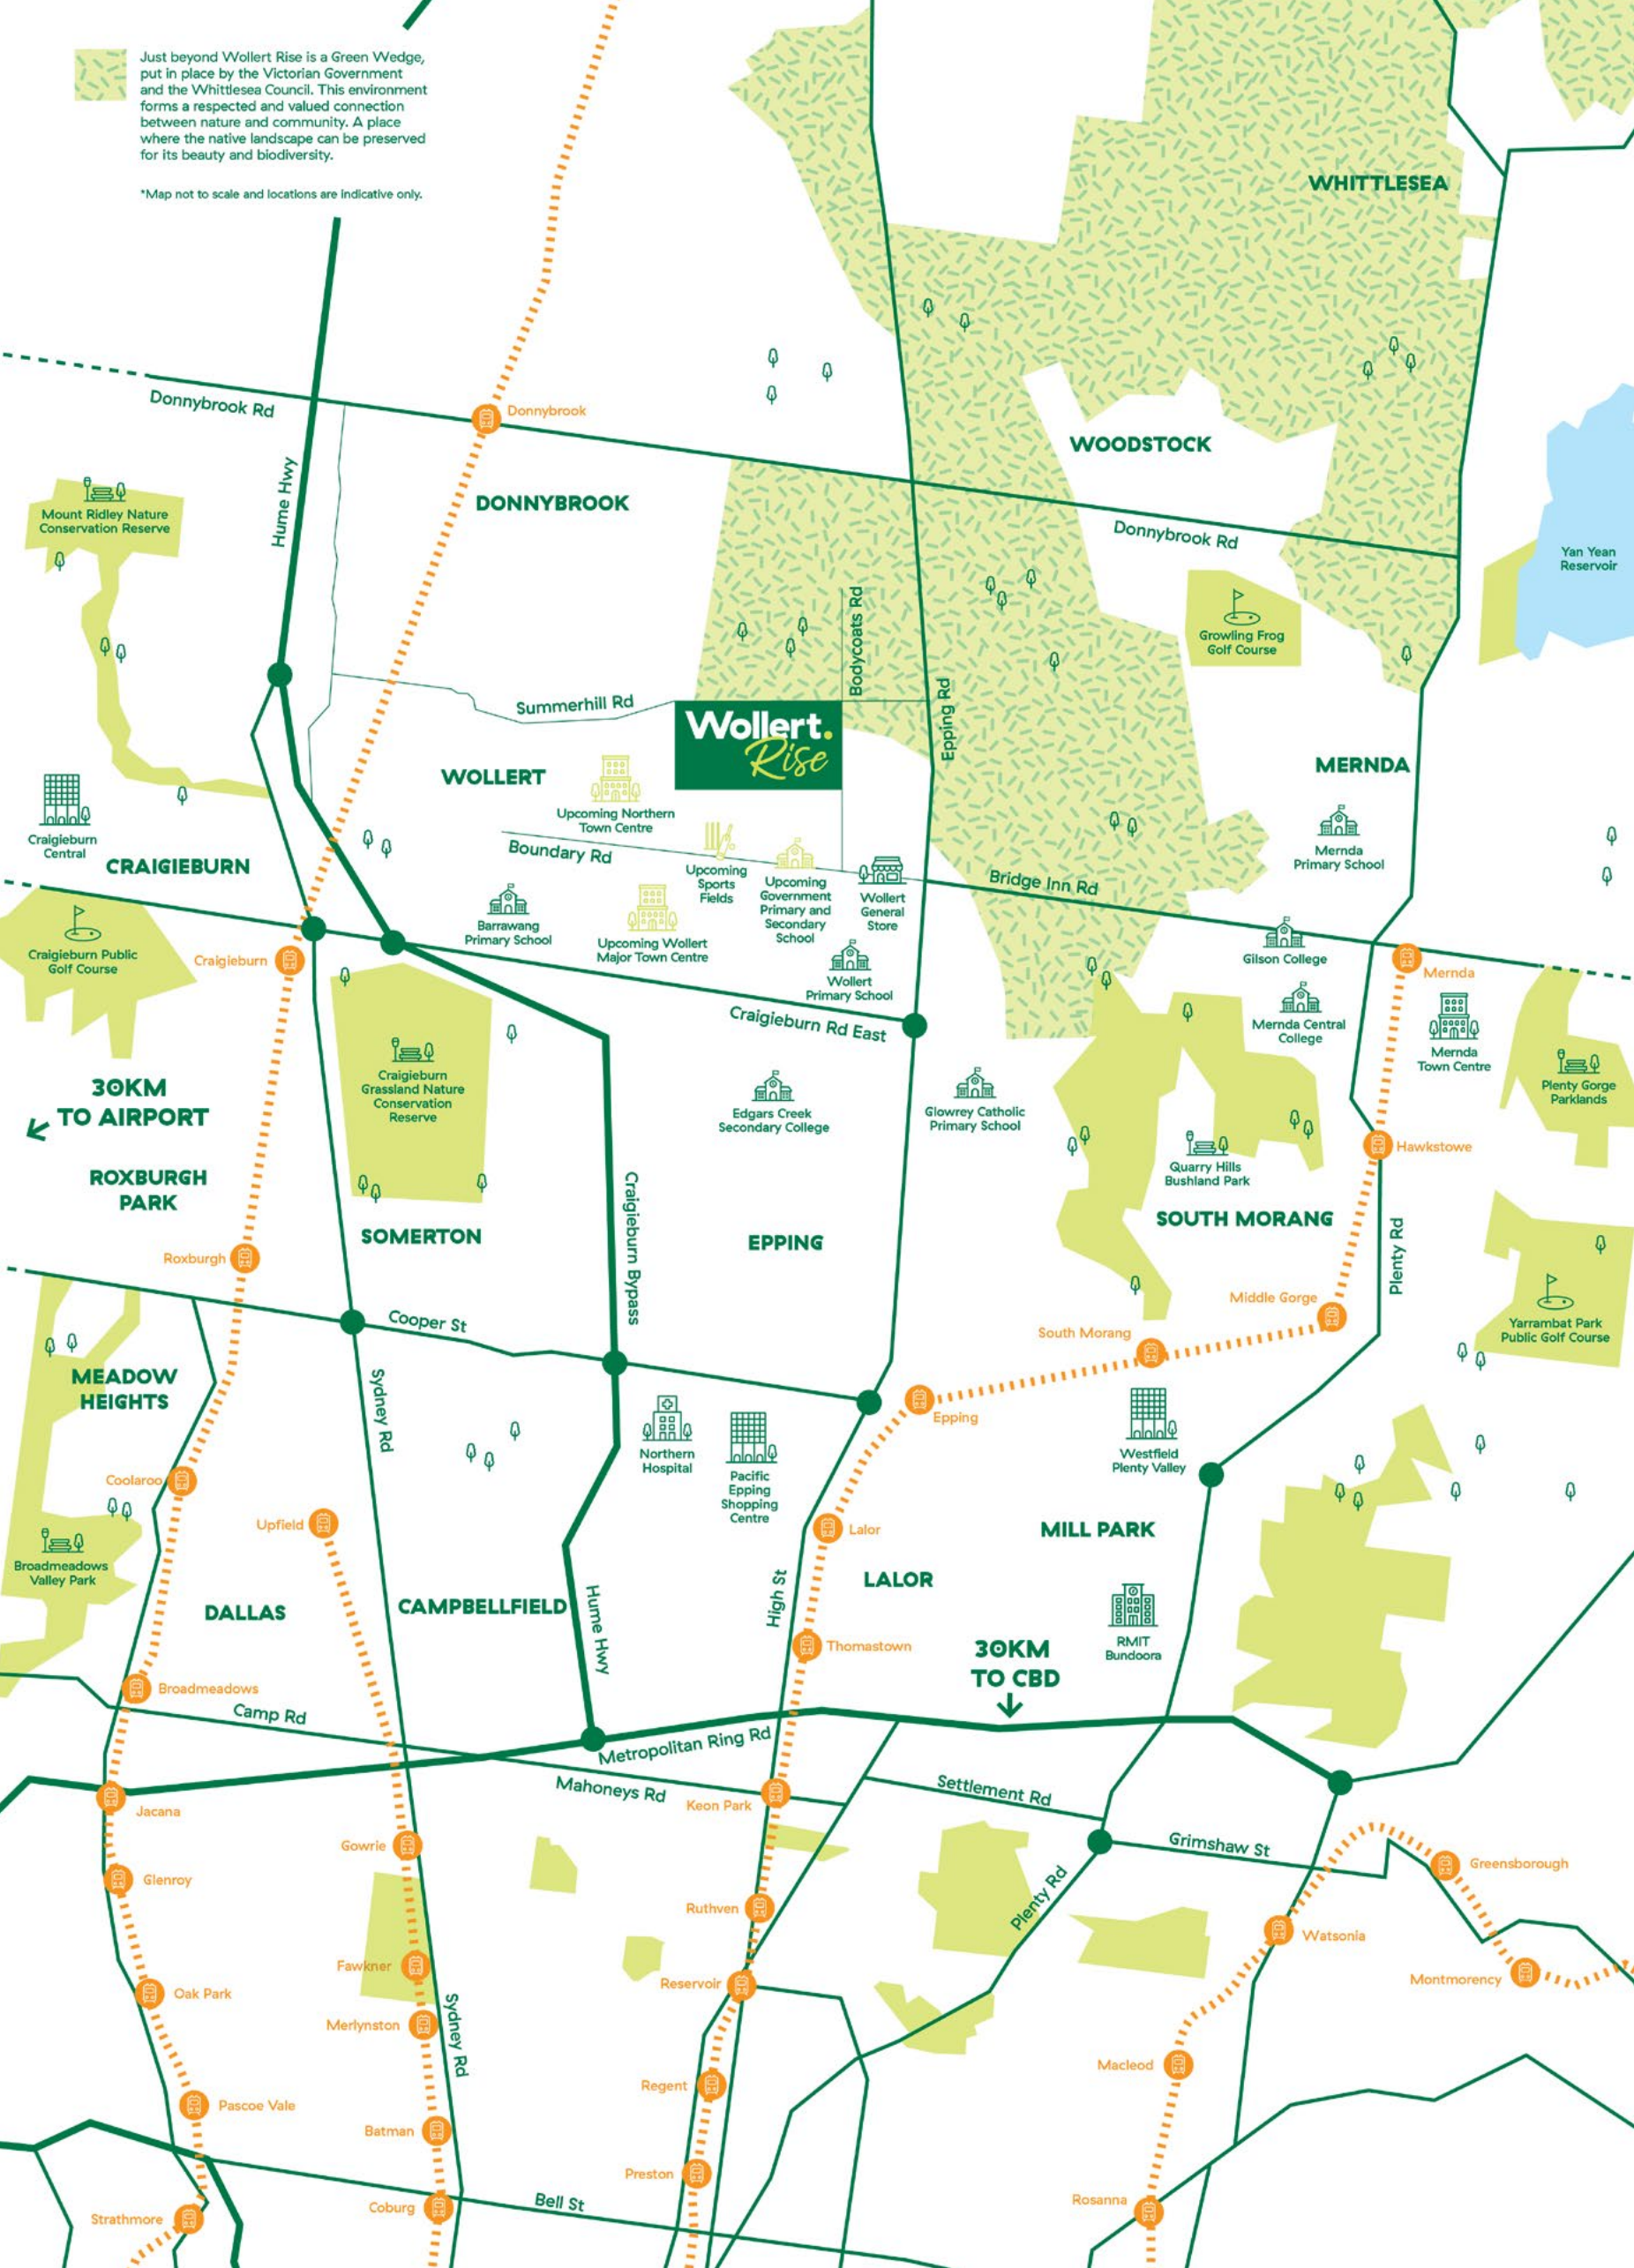

Wollert Rise is home to a vibrant ecosystem of flora and fauna. In fact, you can find almost 300 species of birds in the Whittlesea area, many of which can be found residing in the countless trees, shrubs, creeks and conservation areas in your beautiful part of the world.

Among them is the endangered Orange-Bellied Parrot, Swift Parrot, Regent Honeyeater, Australian Painted Snipe, Far Eastern Curlew and Australasian Bittern.

One of the trees you might find them nesting in is the mighty Red River Gum, which has called this land home for a lot longer than our residents. Today, it's protected for its beauty and role in the region's biodiversity.

For example, its canopy shelters many bird species; native animals feed on its seeds, flowers and leaves; and its hollows provide a safe habitat. Similarly, it provides food for gliders who in turn keep its mistletoe in check, ensuring the trees stay healthy and the gliders well fed.

Now, you can check out their beauty for yourself when you're next at Wollert Rise. Bring a pair of binoculars and try spotting a rare Flame Robin while you're here!
